
Rugby company lands contract with Lib Dems to support their IT systems

Local business grows as more choose free software

Rugby UK xx September 08 – Rugby based Open Source IT Consultancy credativ has been awarded a contract by the Liberal Democrat party to provide server migration and support for their IT systems that integrate the use of free open source software.

credativ specialise in helping organisations benefit from free software. Unlike propriety software such as Microsoft for example, Open Source software is free and without annual license fees to use it. credativ are experts in this field and offer a one-stop shop service to organisations in the private and public sector with cost effective solutions that are right first time. credativ's goal is to exceed client expectations. And UK Manager Martin Birch says “We aim to delight our customers, it's what makes us a valued service provider.”

The Liberal Democrats approached credativ after appraising the company's expertise in free software applications, and were impressed with credativ's Open Source Support Centre that provides support up to 24 hours per day, 7 days a week.

Among credativ's portfolio of customers, The Lib Dems contacted Glasgow North Regeneration Agency for a reference. credativ's track record of service excellence in consultancy, implementation and support, received high praise.

Head of Innovations at The Liberal Democrats HQ, says: “We visited Rugby to ensure credativ could meet our requirements. We were suitably impressed and confident in the knowledge our IT systems would be well supported by a team with proven experience.”

Chris Halls, MD, of credativ UK says: “We are part of the largest independent team of free software engineers in Europe witnessing a significant growth in the number of organisations wanting to install complex computing systems without having to pay high licensing costs.
